I've got a rails app that has a Articles, Events and articles_events table linked with a has_many/through relationship. I use this code to display events of an article like so: But how can I update all the events in the database to count the no. of events of type 1 in this case (ex: music)? A: As @eloy suggests, I would do @article.events.reject{|event| event.type == 1} Rails has the idea of scopes, so you can actually have a scope that works for you, like so: scope :without_type, lambda{ |type| where(type: type) } And then you can do something like @article.events.without_type.each do |event| Association of brain natriuretic peptide with cerebrovascular events in the elderly. There is a well-established correlation between plasma brain natriuretic peptide (BNP) levels and the heart failure syndrome. BNP might also be associated with subclinical cerebrovascular disease in the elderly. We examined this relationship in a cohort of patients aged 65 years or older who underwent serial brain magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) studies to identify subjects with silent brain inf
