some of you in my comments have mentioned editing the post, something I'm not looking to do. Many thanks to people who are trying to help, appreciate it, A: You can use the ignore tags option to do this. For example, the following code will find "yellow" but won't find "green": "yellow.jpg" No, this is not possible. (edited to add more details) Postprocessing can be done before- or after- the answer is saved. As I understand it, before- saves the changes to the post. The changes need to be committed to make them permanent. Once committed, the post is saved, and the result is saved as a draft. If your changes are committed, you can't undo the changes (without the help of a moderator). The rules for post-processing are defined in the help center on the Post-Processing page. If you remove the white space from the beginning of the filename, you can use the find: [find]/\S*\.\jpg$ find: search for and replace text in a file or directory wildcards: ,?, [], {}, \ (search for a string), [find] (beginning of line) (end of line), [] (whitespace). [find] or [^] (any non-whitespace character) or [] (whitespace). \S\.\jpg$: find all characters before a period, followed by a slash, followed by the filename (without the extension). This should also match, for example, or mailto: or something of that sort. The original search string (this is /\S*\.\jpg$) and the modified one (this is [find]/\S*\.\jpg$) should be identical. (If not, you can improve the expression using Regex101.com.) Demo If you want to be very explicit, you can use a negative lookahead, as follows: (?George
