A: I do not understand why people are supporting the "no DVD crack" strategy, though of course it's not wrong. It should be very clear that this is piracy. I do not understand what the owners of the original games feel when they see people downloading their content. I think it's ridiculous, and that it defeats the purpose of the games, which is to provide entertainment, and not for people to steal something that wasn't even their property. I have a legit copy of the game. It is not cracked, so that you can play online. The only thing I've done to it is change the title to "NO DVD crack". And for those who keep asking, the reason is to avoid confusion as to the nature of the game. It's not a crack. It's a modified version. However, it is based on the PC release of the game, which I bought with the retail disc. I can play it online, and I did not buy it on any kind of "pirate" game, which is illegal. I used to do that a long time ago, and it led to a lot of problems. Today, I would just not have bought it at all. So, again, I do not understand what this is all about. If you really want to play it on a console, just go to the store and buy the retail copy. You do not need to download some torrents, download some other product, or any other kind of thing. Just buy the game, and play it. The fact that you are using the source code as a way to get around the fact that you can't play the game, and that this has resulted in you purchasing a new copy of the game, is ridiculous. A script for documenting your browser (Web Record) - aldenius ===== aldenius Just a script I wrote to export the information from my current browsers. I can then analyze what I've collected and see what the chances are to have the current browser and what OS. My browser are always like: > chrome, chromium, google chrome, opera Then I have to do this: > e.g. 'google chrome, Win7'. so what I do now is just a for loop to
