The developer(s) of Resi is the South Korean company Bluehole. Bluehole have already made 2 other games before, DotA and Defense of the Ancients in which you use "heroes" called "Mana/Items" (The old names). These heroes are like "Yourself" but with different powers. Resi is the sixth main game in the series with Resident Evil being the original. The 125 was built to compete against the Suzuki V-Strom 1000 and Honda CBR400.

Specifications Engine The 125 was powered by a single-cylinder, four-stroke, four-valve engine.

A liquid cooled, four-valve cylinder head was fitted with a 58 mm Mikuni carburettor which produced at 7,000 rpm. Transmission The 125 was equipped with a five-speed transmission, the only available configuration of the time. Brakes The 125 was equipped with Brembo monoblock calipers. The front brake used a 320 mm ventilated front disc, and the rear brake used a 340 mm disc. Suspension The 125's twin-shock rear suspension featured twin telescopic forks, a semi-trailing link, with a triple-leading-shoe. The front suspension was a semi-trailing link with a single-leading-shoe. Chassis The 125 used a high-rigidity tubular frame, and a single-sided swingarm. A wet sump oiling system was used, with an oil tank in the frame. History The Ducati 125 was announced in early 2003, and went on sale in May 2003. The 125 was priced at €5,800 in Europe. Ducati said that the 125 represented the "first official step" into the 125cc market.

The 125 was available in three trim levels, named Basic, Street and Road. The 125 was only available in right hand drive from the factory, as the left-hand drive version was to
