----- on the same day that that happens to be the only article about it, it will have been in the news media. So much for the news media being able to analyze for themselves. (I hate to add "theory" to the mix) if you are selling a house, you don't want to do it in the week where there is a big Triffic sale.
Triffic's husband is a very successful real estate agent and he tells us that when he is doing a lot of Triffic sales with his own listings, their sales have fallen considerably. There is no doubt that hype is a factor, no doubt that "there's a sucker born every minute" and no doubt that there is a lot of jealousy in the real estate industry. While it would be easy to say that people buy a house when the market is high and sell in a declining market, I don't think that that is the whole story. A couple of years ago I did a study of all the homes sold in my area over a year. I found that
