PINK1 was the first gene linked to familial amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS). Since the discovery of its genetic mutations in 1990, numerous studies have been performed to unravel the molecular mechanisms behind ALS pathogenesis and to validate PINK1 as a therapeutic target. Animal models have been a key tool in the study of PINK1 mechanisms. However, there is a growing interest in humanized pre-clinical models, for which technical and ethical issues pose some difficulties. This paper briefly reviews the literature on PINK1 animal models, and explains the pros and cons of the different PINK1 models. It also discusses the translational potential of humanized pre-clinical models. Finally, it focuses on ALS-associated mutations, and on the discovery of new therapeutic targets.. W. H. Press and P. L. Bender, editors, [*Numerical Recipes in Fortran]{ }, second edition (Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 1992). V. N. Man'ko and G. M.
