FotoCat allows you to catalog any collection of your photos and to use them as a basis for creating a catalog of any other media: a catalog of photos and videos, a catalog of music or a catalog of documents. You can use FotoCat as a stand-alone application, or as a companion to any other application that can use a catalog as a database. FotoCat is a very intuitive and simple application, but also very flexible. You can use it as a catalog of your image collection, a catalog of your music collection, a catalog of your documents, or even a catalog of your video collection. You can work with images as a single user or as a group, with a level of security and restrictions that you can easily define. To be able to work with documents you will need to install a driver that will allow FotoCat to interpret the EXIF data of your documents. You can manage your collections in several ways: you can browse them in a grid, you can open and save collections, and you can delete them at any time. You can also set which collections will be shown in the grid. You can easily manage your images by setting permissions for each of your groups. You can use the search function to find a specific image quickly, or you can simply browse through the grid or the collections. FotoCat will allow you to create subgroups within a group, just like you can do it within an album. It can even keep track of images that you have downloaded over the Internet. It has a built-in database that can be searched and modified directly from the interface. You can use the built-in database as a proxy for the system database to edit the data that it contains. You can use the built-in database to update your image collection, as well as to update the system database, and it will automatically replace the data that has been updated. You can even share your catalog with other users using email or a USB memory key. FotoCat can search for images that have been downloaded from the Internet or that have been added to the system. FotoCat can also search for keywords that you have entered into the search field. FotoCat supports the ability to add tags, so that your images can be easily found, as well as the ability to use facial recognition to automatically categorize your images. You can use FotoCat to catalog not only your photos, but also your music, documents and videos. You can even create catalogs for your media collections, and use them to quickly find anything. When you start up FotoCat, you'll see a screen that lets you create a catalog of your media, or import an existing catalog. Once you have created a catalog, you can add images and other media to it. You can specify the permissions that you want to apply to the images and other
