RelatedQ: Blocking UDP requests with packet sniffers I want to program a simple web server that handle some simple REST requests. Therefore I am using libevent I have this UDP socket: if (my_udp_socket = socket(AF_INET, SOCK_DGRAM, 0) == -1) { printf("Socket creation failed! "); } Now, I want to fire some requests to the server, so I use: static int req_result = -1; void handle_request(void) { ++req_result; if (req_result == req_list_size) { close(my_udp_socket); exit(0); }

It looks like a ransom message, though, or maybe the release of a virus, with some bit manipulation. I'd contact the people who uploaded the image, or if this is just a picture they have published before, flag the image for moderator attention. A: Paint.NET Note: I downloaded the image.png from your description, and opened it with Paint.NET. It's blank. I took a look at your description of the image, and saw a few strange lines: your browser will open in a new window your email will be opened in a new window your browser will open in a new window your browser will close in a new window your browser will close in a new window I checked your email and in it, you had a few pictures, and it seemed that your email was actually a forged chain email. Boxy influences 06/05/2018 Celestron's new Novascope and iOptron's new AstroGlow are big and boxy. The Novascope's extreme barrel distortion and the AstroGlow's flat astrolight will not be to everyone's taste. Celestron did not respond to requests for comment. Aftermarket lenses are available, but no adapter is available from Celestron. Celestron and iOptron's new portable achromatic telescope designs are big, heavy and boxy. Neither will be a good fit for all in the field, and neither will be ideal for the backcountry 570a42141b
