The capital, which has seen a violent crime wave in recent years, has begun to see a steady drop in homicides. From Oct. 1 through July 7 this year, including fatal shootings, there have been 27 homicides in the city, compared with 39 during the same period last year, according to an analysis by the Chicago Sun-Times. The clearance rate for murder, which officials say has hit a 10-year high, is also up 5.5 percent over the same time period last year, according to data from the Chicago Police Department. "I was a little surprised," Mayor Lori Lightfoot said of the uptick in homicides. "I don't want to get too excited about it because of all the other bad news we have, but it was certainly good news. It's a good sign that we're getting more tip-offs to the cops." Lightfoot emphasized that more people are being shot and killed, and that police are being sent to more of them. "But there are just as many that are coming in, for whatever reason, that are not ending up with someone dying," she said. The 15 homicides this year alone that already have been attributed to the Halloween shooting in South Shore have occurred in or near the Englewood and Woodlawn neighborhoods. Police have said the 27 homicides in the city this year were from nine different gang-related factions. Twenty-one of the victims were from the main gangs — the Chano gang in the West Englewood neighborhood, the Gangster Disciples in the West Side, the Latin Kings in the South Side, the Vice Lords in the Southwest Side, the Gangster Disciples in the Southwest Side, the Insane Deuces in the East Side, the Black Disciples in the Far South Side, the Vice Lords in the West Side and the Warlords in the South Side. The last time there were so many gang-related killings in a single year was in 2006, when police shot a record 55 people in 28 days, killing 49 of them. During that Halloween weekend, one person was killed in a shooting Friday night and another died the following night. Meanwhile, this year's homicide clearance rate and a little-known shooting on June 22 that also claimed the life of a young man will be among key metrics used by some city officials to draw comparisons with previous years. Induction of t-bet in Th2 cells by polyinosinic-polycytidylic acid. T-bet is a specific transcriptional activator for IL-12R β 2 chain and plays important roles in the differentiation of Th1 cells. In addition, the expression of T-bet is induced in Th2 cells in mice infected with a helminth parasite, but how is this induced expression regulated remains unclear. Here we demonstrate that the synthesis of T-bet protein is up-regulated by polyinosinic-polycytidylic acid (poly I:C) in Th2 cells but not in Th1 cells through the activation of type I IFN receptor on a cell-specific manner. This induction of T-bet was dependent on STAT1 activation. Moreover, poly I:C up-regulated the transcription of T-bet at the IFN- β - and Ebi3-dependent fashion, but not that of IL-12R β 2. In addition, we found that T-bet up-regulation by poly I:C was mediated by MyD88-independent pathway and required the stabilization of IFN- β by the STAT2 molecule. Thus, T-bet up-regulation by poly I:C appears to be a common mechanism for the generation of Th2 cells. The assignee of the present application, the Photonic Integrated Circuit, Inc. (PICI), has shown that by employing a single crystalline ultra-high resistivity semiconductor, grown on a multi-crystalline substrate, a stable electro-optic device can be constructed. FIG. 1 illustrates a sectional view of an in-plane integrator constructed according to the PICI process. The device includes a substrate 1 having grown thereon a stable single crystalline semiconductor, nominally In.sub.0.53 Ga.sub.0.47 As. The semiconductor layer 2 has grown thereon a multi-crystalline semiconductor, nominally InP. This multi-crystalline layer may comprise a cap layer or an undergrowth layer. This layer is doped with a p-type impurity, such as Mg, to provide a p+ contact layer 3. An n-contact layer 4 is deposited on the p+ layer 3. The substrate 1, the semiconductor layer 2, the multi-crystalline layer 3, and the n-contact layer 4 form a substrate-semiconductor-multi-crystalline-
