Create a series of keyboard shortcuts for your Windows-based computers with Comfort Keys Lite. By simply defining keyboard shortcuts to actions you perform on your PC, you can make your life easier and more productive. It's been so long since the last time I posted here, that I'm afraid my collection of hard-earned karma will just fly away forever. But today it's all about fun and entertainment, so let's start with the latest episode of The Walking Dead, Season 4, Episode 1: The Saint of Slumber. I really like how they ended the season before, with a teaser for next year, and a bit of foreshadowing. I hope this isn't just a means to avoid making a big resolution statement, like "Beware who you trust, cause they may not be who they seem to be". I thought it was fitting that they ended the season with a relatively normal, well-motivated, happy ending, whereas in the previous two seasons, we saw Maggie and the little girl moving to an unknown location, and the entirety of the survivors are either a ticking time-bomb of a self-destruct sequence, or are trying to find safe places where they can live "innocent" lives. This made me wonder: what if the zombies didn't die? Now, I understand that a lot of media and gaming related industries live off of the formula "if it's popular, it's safe to assume that a lot of people will be playing it." But if the zombies keep living... and doing their thing... how much longer can we take them seriously? Sure, they can't run, but they have unlimited amount of strength. If they were going to use that to try to outrun a car, then it would be cool, but they can't even chase after walkers that are closing in on them. Heck, the only real use of a mobile zombie is getting away from a horde. If they want to use it to get to where the stores are and find supplies, that might be a good idea, but it's already a bad idea to let a horde know where to go, because then you let them know where the safe places are. "Hey, they could be good for us!" I'm not saying they won't want to eat your brains. I'm saying that it's more likely that they just won't want to be near any humans. And if they can't hunt, what's the best use of a zombie? The only thing
