Adiponectin (Adp) is an adipocyte-secreted protein that plays a major role in fatty acid metabolism. In this study, we identified N-acetylglucosamine (GlcNAc)-modified proteins of the differentiated 3T3-L1 adipocytes. Using mouse monoclonal antibodies, we found that several proteins, including adipocyte lipid binding protein, 4-trans-2-cys-trans-1,2-diaminocyclohexanetra-acetate deaminase, protein disulfide isomerase, peroxiredoxin-1, and O-GlcNAc transferase-1, were GlcNAcylated. Using immunofluorescent staining and chemical cross-linking, we confirmed that the O-GlcNAcylation site of adipocyte lipid binding protein is located in

----- In Windows OS, a password is actually a series of characters. To set a strong password you need to remember all of them but with an easy way to do it is to use a virtual keyboard. For example, I type password with number of keys on my keyboard: [a-z], [0-9], [&^*]; We can set a password by doing the same thing. You just need to type the keystrokes while holding the shift key. A key password is a series of keystrokes or mouse movements used to access the user account. This involves several types of hardware, software and system. The most commonly used is the keyboard, for example, in general someone may put a special character on their keyboard (e.g. "ctrl + a", "ctrl + s", "ctrl + x", "ctrl + d" etc.). The keystroke for example "ctrl + a" means "begin". The most convenient way to remember this keystroke is to store a password in a text file using a text editor (e.g. Notepad, Wordpad).
