All right – if you didn't get his point the first time – Mark Ruffalo made me listen to Neil Gaiman's lecture on his book, Good Omens, when he was promoting the movie. So I gave it another listen. It's an excellent lecture, and if you're interested in Gods, Angels and the End of the World, and you want to read his book, read Good Omens. But here's the lecture for those who want to listen. I'm reading The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, read so many times I know where the book is in the series by heart. I know the answer to the question when it comes to which episode is considered the best. So I thought I'd gather all the episodes and make them into a playlist. You'll hear my cry in the first and the last episodes. I wrote that one. As always – Thanks to the band who did the soundtrack, The Transparent Soundtrack. It's a fantastic album, if you haven't heard it yet. It's late, but I need to say thank you to some of the people who came to the news event where I talked about why I love science fiction so much. (And no, I didn't get to talk about Guardians of the Galaxy, but I hope to in the future.) Like this: I thought I'd talk a bit about writing the screenplay for Guardians of the Galaxy. First – I know I've mentioned this before – but I'm reading The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. I've read it so many times I know all the facts about it. Almost. And every time I read it I think I've read it before, and I have a different new thing I haven't noticed before. So I thought, why not make a playlist with all the chapters of the book? So – The First is – The Concept Chapter 1 – The Earth Chapter 2 – The Galaxy The Concept – What's going to be the main problem when the newly formed Galaxy is looking for a new place to live? The concept could be: is there anything in the universe that has already been colonized? A hint is
