Champion in 2009, South region, Raymond Sorkin (Bethany) (30-2). list of the top 20 players, as voted by The Record-PWarfare for the Greater Good Over the past month, an on-and-off rainfall cycle in Sub-Saharan Africa has brought rolling clouds of tropical dust that have blanketed the entire continent and blown right into the air, putting millions of people at risk of getting lung, airway and skin diseases. This dry, dusty haze has been inching westward, from the Atlantic Ocean, and it's on its way here, to the U.S. To the naked eye, the haze could be a nuisance—but for a deeper look, there's a bright spotlight on air pollution in Africa. This is the result of a joint effort between the African Union and the European Union to enhance understanding and provide a platform for collective action to strengthen environmental protection within the region. As they embark on an eight-year plan, the two organizations are bringing together experts from government and academia to analyze data and exchange best practices for the purpose of boosting the efforts of African countries in environmental law, capacity building and policy. In a 2012 report, the African Development Bank estimates that climate change—due to air pollution—is already costing Africa at least $5 billion every year. Similar pollution, such as the haze from smoking, contributes significantly to the region's poor healthcare quality. Over 3.5 million people in Nigeria, the most polluted country in the world, will be affected by the deadly effects of outdoor air pollution by 2025, according to a new report by the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The African Union and the European Union will look into air pollution in Sub-Saharan Africa in light of findings in other continents. In North America, a recent National Academy of Sciences
