It's been a long time since I've made an update, but I guess I'm getting back into the game! As you know I'm currently recovering from surgery. Surgery is tough and I'm definitely not at 100%. I had to have two separate procedures. The first was a cholecystectomy, where they removed my gall bladder. The second procedure was a skin graft on my abdomen. I've been off work since June and it's finally starting to feel like I'm getting back to normal. I've also finally gotten back in the gym to begin my bodybuilding comeback. I'll be attending the Drug-Free show next week in Phoenix and I'm looking forward to seeing my friends and supporters in person. Things are starting to look up, but still not the way I'd like them to. The Show! The Phoenix Drug-Free show is held in the Ahwatukee Foothills. Phoenix is my hometown and I'm from the North Phoenix area. This show was made possible by the Arizona Biotech Association, the Arizona Medical Association, the Phoenix City Council, and hundreds of doctors and nurses from the Valley. The National Eye Institute/Industry Workshop, sponsored by The Association for Research on Vision and Ophthalmology and the National Eye Institute, convened a group of ophthalmic physicians to address a number of major ophthalmic problems. Several of the presentations focused on the prevalence of dry eye in the U.S. population. The findings of this workshop, in which the use of different methods was evaluated and the results of their comparison, are reported in the present article. Dry eye is an emerging public health problem in the United States with potentially far-reaching implications for individual patients, health care providers, and health care payers. There is a significant underrecognition of the problems and disease and a lack of consensus among investigators as to the importance of the problem and its relationship to the general health of populations. Because it is a largely preventable disease, new knowledge about its prevalence and causes may significantly reduce the morbidity and cost of this problem. Eight regional groups selected representatives from many disciplines to address the problem. The investigators participated in national meetings and teleconferences to informally address common themes and problems and to discuss challenges to successful collaboration and consensus on the findings. #ifndef
