It's able to work without any intervention Automated processes are the best ones out there. Following this rule, YouTube Lyrics for Firefox activates itself whenever a YouTube tab is up and running. A small notepad-like window will pop up, a song is loaded. Its initial position will be in the top-right part of the window, but you can freely drag it anywhere else. Cycling to multiple sources The extension gets you the lyrics by probing sites that host such content. Usually, identifying and playing the lyrics is done in a matter of seconds, no matter the language. However, as already mentioned, if the song has a title that offers less to no information or is compiles with other tracks, the add-on might not work. Sifting through sources is not a hard thing to do. Just click on the Different Sources title to swap or investigate them. In addition, if you are not comfortable with the default white background, you can change it to a dark theme. Just scroll down to the bottom of the UI, and you'll find the checkbox. To sum it up YouTube Lyrics for Firefox might the perfect companion for users who like to understand what they're listening to. Due to its neat automatic lyrics identification and display, don't feel bad if you install this extension and forget about its existence, as that appears to be the point.
