Michele Davis In March 2015 the viral disease Zika virus was seen for the first time in a person bitten by an infected mosquito in Puerto Rico. The female mosquito carries the virus to her eggs, and then the virus is spread to her offspring by feeding. While the disease is mild or non-existent in women who have not yet had children, the virus can cause miscarriage in pregnant women. Until recently, little was known about this virus. Leukaemia, lymphoma and chronic lymphocytic leukaemia (CLL), are the most common types of leukaemia in the USA. Now, new research has shown that a single gene mutation is found in leukemia and lymphoma patients. The mutation is in a molecule called a humanised G protein beta3 subunit. Mosquitoes probably did it. Starting in 1952, Zika virus has been in Africa and Asia. It was first isolated in Uganda in 1947 and was present for the next few decades, but in 1995 it disappeared from Africa except for a few isolated cases. In 2007, Zika virus was found in Central and South America where it is now circulating. By 2013, cases were reported in Venezuela, St. Martin, the Netherlands, and Senegal. Then in 2014, the virus moved to Brazil and from there to countries in South America and through trade in mosquitoes to at least 16 countries in Central and South America, the Middle East, and Southeast Asia. As of June 2015, there are 98 countries where Zika virus transmission has been confirmed (the World Health Organisation website), and now Zika virus infections have been confirmed in at least 80 countries, including among pregnant women. Although many cases are mild, around 1% of infected people develop serious brain-related problems, such as loss of limbs and temporary paralytic effects.
