A crucial cog in the bookkeeping for the S&P 500 has been missing since the coronavirus crisis began. It's called the VIX. The Chicago Board Options Exchange Volatility Index (VIX), a measure of expected stock market volatility, has been stuck at 25.7, since the January 24 market close. That's a level that hasn't been seen in over a decade. Sure, we still have some bad economic news – that trade agreement with China was supposed to be signed any day now. Basically, you missed your chance to make a solid profit. And as long as the VIX is pushing up above 25, the last three weeks will be remembered as the best of times. Worst of times is more like it. Why? Because the V
