For some people, knowing how to use Photoshop in Elements can be more than just an important skill in understanding how images are created. It can be a matter of survival for many of these users. Many stock images, for example, are created in Photoshop. To learn how to edit them, you must first learn how to work in Photoshop in Elements. In this article, we'll share four ways to learn how to work with images in Elements, and help you make the most of your experience. Get the best download speed on UK internet connections Download on Desktop or mobile Download on Mac OSX Download on Windows The 4 ways to learn how to work with images in Elements The first and most obvious solution is to simply spend hours in front of the computer, learning how to edit digital images, using your own eyes as the best teachers. That's the best and often only way to learn to use Photoshop or Elements, though. However, for each user, there are likely to be methods that are more effective than the first one. The only problem is that those methods are not obvious. That's why I like using the visual tools that Elements offers to learn to edit images. If you feel comfortable with the tools you already know, feel free to use those, or the "hand picked" tutorials that are often published on specialised sites about Photoshop and Elements. However, if you want to learn on your own without relying on videos and tutorials, the four methods below are worth your time and attention. How to learn to edit images in Photoshop Elements The first method to learn how to work with images in Elements is simple – start looking at the most common tools and settings. The most basic tools you'll use are the one already included in the interface and those that are part of the shortcut key combos. You'll use the Toolbox, then the Edit panel, which contains the Undo button, the Tool options menu, the Brush settings, the Paths panels and several more. If you understand all the parts of the interface and how they work, the learning process is much faster. If you are already familiar with Photoshop, this method will take a longer time to get comfortable with Elements. However, it is more rewarding, because your skills will be useful in other ways. When Golden State Warriors' head coach Steve Kerr announced that the team would cut ties with suspended All-Star Draymond Green, the blow to the players was instantaneous. It wasn't as if they weren't already in the midst of the first tumultuous season of a season that couldn't have been more hectic. Green missed all the summertime practices and scrimmages, and it seemed that they could never pull together as a team. The Warriors had traded Kevin Durant to the Oklahoma City Thunder, and were still trying to deal for the best shooter in the league that they could acquire—all while trying to keep Chris Paul and Blake Griffin off the table in a trade. And then, predictably, Kevin Durant decided he wasn't going to remain with the team that had traded him for Klay Thompson. More importantly, they lost their eleventh man in Shaun Livingston in the opening minutes of the season. Livingston's locker was packed when Kerr called a team meeting to talk to the players about the loss of Green. "You guys are going to miss your best friend in the world," Kerr told the team. "We're going to try to soldier on, but we're going to miss him." The Warriors have seen a lot of it in the last few weeks. The Draymond Green controversy hasn't ended and hasn't exactly healed in the time off. Now, the Warriors are going into another grueling postseason where they'll have to battle through the Oklahoma City Thunder and New Orleans Pelicans, and they'll have their biggest challenge yet when they face former teammate Russell Westbrook in the Western Conference Finals. It's all part of the growing pains of a team that is trying to find itself as it enters the 2019-20 season. On Saturday night, the Warriors lost to the Kings in their season opener for the first time since 1998. They hadn't been a dominant defensive team in the 30 years between their two previous loss to the Kings. Saturday's game showed just how much the team has improved over the last four to five years. They were able to close out the game in dominant fashion, and they followed that up with a five game winning streak. The Warriors are ready to make their 2018-19 season a success. Then there's the potential of superstars like Kevin Durant or Klay Thompson to play in

When clicking on a link, I get the wrong page selected. Instead of the first link that I clicked on, it goes to the second. It seems to be related to the text-view that is used. I read something about that this is a common bug with text-views, but I can't really find a solution. I set the textview clickable to true, and I have set for all the views inside the webview by adding android:clickable="true" This seems to work, but I know that there must be a better way, preferably if the links could be selected automatically with a click inside the text-view, but I don't know how. The page I am trying to open looks like this: This is the code of the WebView in my java file: web = (WebView) findViewById(R.id.main_webview); web.loadUrl(""); I think that probably there is some basic mistake, but as I said I don't know what it is, so I am not able to debug it. I know that I can try many code examples, but I think that the problem is pretty simple, and maybe there are the answers of someone who have read my question before. Thank you in advance. A: Try using this method to set a TextView as link. private TextView setTextAsLink(TextView textView, String url) { URLSpan[] spans = textView.getSpans(0, textView.get
