Q: Odd behaviour of Windows Firewall I'm having a very strange problem when running Windows 7 Enterprise.

Basically, I install a new client's program and it opens up a new port on my router.

When I go to my Windows Firewall configuration, I can see the new port being open.

However, when I run netstat, I don't see anything for that port.

The other ports in my router's configuration do get picked up by netstat. I can then run nmap and see that port scanned, but when I scan my own IP (using nmap) I don't see it. I can't find anything about this on the net, and I'm completely baffled.

Please let me know if you need any more information. A: You can find out what's using a port with the following command:

netstat -abn

This will show you everything binding to a port. If you have any other firewall tools installed you can try disabling it and seeing if that helps. Tranquil forests, rural settings, a comfortable guesthouse, and a long tradition of hospitality all combine to make the Hotel Windmill, a museum hotel in the Liptovskyi Nature Reserve, Ukraine, a timeless spot in eastern Europe. In 2006, the owner, Mykola Shapkina, gathered information about the history of his property, and he and his family now host about 100 guests in the original wooden building. The Windmill Museum opened in 2014. A vivid portrait of the former Soviet industrial past appears in eight exhibit rooms. The museum is contained in a colonial-style house with a veranda, built in 1900. Six guest rooms feature distinctive decor, and guests enjoy the use of a veranda with a view of the nature reserve. The Hungarian-born Shapkina is a poet, a nature lover, and a man of the road who has traveled widely. His travels lead him to remote parts of Ukraine, and he has made friends with the hospitable folks he encounters. “Travelers who want to relax and unwind at an authentic experience,” says Shapkina. “We have a relaxing atmosphere. Guests relax in their rooms. They don’t have to do anything.”¹. Field of the Invention The present

JUDGMENT." TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE § 51.014(a)(5) (emphasis added). [3] Chapter nine does not state that a party may appeal a declaratory judgment. Rather, it indicates that a "judgment rendered in an action or proceeding as provided by this chapter may be reviewed by an appeal or by writ of error, as provided by law in other cases of civil appeal or writ of error." TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM.CODE § 51.014(a)(9). [4] The discovery chapter also indicates that a "judgment or appealable order" is appealable. See id. § 51.014(a)(1) (allowing an appeal from an interlocutory order "granting... a temporary injunction"); id. § 51.014(a)(4) (allowing an appeal from a temporary injunction that "grants or refuses a temporary injunction"); id. § 101.021(e) (allowing an appeal from an order that "grants or refuses a plea to the jurisdiction"). [5]

To the extent that a party may be able to pursue mandamus relief from a trial court's denial of a plea to the jurisdiction, mandamus would be available to review the denial of a plea to the jurisdiction. See, e.g., TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM.CODE §§ 15.0642, 16.064; Johnson v. Brewer & Pritchard, P.C., 73 S.W.3d 193, 204 (Tex.2002) (explaining that the availability of mandamus review of trial court orders denying motions to dismiss or for summary judgment depends on the interlocutory nature of the order and the availability of an adequate remedy by appeal). [6] If a statute gives the court of appeals discretion to determine its own jurisdiction, it is an appellate court, not a constitutional court. We therefore have jurisdiction over this interlocutory appeal under section 51.014(a)(5) of the Texas Civil Practice and Remedies Code. [7] In Lawrence v. CDB Service Company, Inc., a party argued that a jurisdictionally deficient claim could be severed and the remaining, properly-prosecuted claim could be appealed. 44
