Field of the Invention The present invention is directed to a medical ultrasonic imaging system for imaging a human body. In particular, the system is an ultrasonic surface imaging system designed for use in the detection and diagnosis of various diseases. 2. Prior Art Ultrasonic imaging systems are widely used in the medical field. The general principle of the ultrasonic imaging systems is to use piezoelectric elements to transmit ultrasonic signals into a patient's body to be analyzed, and to receive the ultrasonic signals that are reflected back from the body. When a patient is imaged, the transmitted ultrasonic signals are reflected by any moving, e.g. diseased, tissues in the patient's body, so that the patient's body tissues appear as bright and dark bands on the video screen of a receiver. Previously, one type of ultrasonic imaging system usually had either a linear arrangement or a curved arrangement of the piezoelectric elements. In order to improve the overall ultrasonic imaging quality of the system, including sensitivity and resolution, attempts have been made in the past to use ultrasonic imaging systems having an arrangement of multiple piezoelectric elements. The piezoelectric elements are arranged in arrays and are fed with a sine wave signal, as used in older systems. In contrast to the older systems, newer systems use pulse-echo imaging techniques to implement multiple piezoelectric elements arranged in arrays, and to achieve greater resolutions and greater sensitivities. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,710,827 to A. Turrini et al, entitled "Electronic scanning system for medical ultrasonic imaging," disclosed an electronic scanning system for medical ultrasonic imaging for use with a display device for displaying images of ultrasonic reflections from a human body. This system employs a scanning assembly with multiple piezoelectric elements which are used for forming ultrasonic images through pulse-echo imaging
