I'm pretty sure it's been a solid two years or so (since December 2015), and I really only ever buy one book a year, so... maybe that says something. The Glass Heroes concerns the creation of the chemical weapon sulfur mustard (HD), and how this project was allowed to go to war. The novel is broken up into segments, and it takes a while to go through it all, but it was done well, and the chapters are quite good. It is, however, also fascinating, and I came out of reading it feeling like perhaps it's time for the world to understand what had been happening. I wonder if the novel is novel enough? It is a convincing fictional story, but even the Wikipedia page seems to be more like an abstract of the historical fact. I don't know, maybe it's just me? On the other hand, it does show a possible explanation for the US government to have allowed this chemical attack to happen. It does show a disturbing amount

PAUL (AP) — A new Minnesota law that cracked down on nuisance egg farms that damage wild habitat by crushing eggs and allowing henhouses to be more densely packed was billed as an environmental piece of legislation. But opponents said the bill actually was a much-needed economic move, since Minnesota is a center of egg production, especially for the grocery store chain Hormel, which employs more than 17,000 people. They called it a "barrier" to the industry. The measure, which went into effect last month, is one of many egg industry-related bills that came out of the Minnesota Legislature this past session. Other lawmaking efforts have sought to boost egg farmers by exempting them from new animal welfare requirements. This year, lawmakers also softened up the poultry industry by easing up rules for city and county zoning. Last year, a bill passed that prevented the state from enforcing a 2020 deadline on switching to cage-free eggs. Most measures make it harder to be an egg farmer in Minnesota. As a result, the state has lost the territory of selling eggs. That's the case for Prairie Egg Farms in Washington County, northeast of Minneapolis. "I can't make a profit selling those eggs here," said farmer Stephen Schoenbeck. "It's illegal to sell them in Minnesota. They're being shipped out of state, down to the Gulf Coast
