One of the great myths about Microsoft Surface is that its software is worthless or insignificant. But a user's ability to run older Windows programs on their Surface is very important, in our opinion. While it is true that Windows 8 is limited in its ability to run older software, the fact that you can still use older programs like Acrobat, PowerPoint, and Photoshop on a Surface is extremely valuable to most people. From the Acer perspective, the folks that make the hardware, we also believe that compatibility with Windows 8 is important. Acer decided to dual boot to ensure that customers can install either Android or Windows 8 on their Acer tablets. Likewise, Acer decided to support both Android and Windows 8 on these devices. For a consumer, whether they have a PC, tablet, or smartphone, the ability to install a Microsoft Operating System and still run their existing programs is very important. Both Acer and Microsoft have decided that Windows 8 and Windows RT should be compatible and Acer has developed a BIOS update to better support Windows RT based devices. When Windows 8 and Windows RT were announced, the devices that we've looked at used the Intel Atom processor. When we heard that Acer was planning to release dual boot devices using this processor we thought that would be enough to say that Windows RT would have a good chance of being successful. While there were issues with the Intel Atom processor, the core was okay (for Atom that is). Using the same core, the Microsoft Surface device would have no issue running Windows 8. We thought that it was a given that Microsoft would have to support Windows RT in order to ensure that the Surface ran Windows RT as it would be very difficult to differentiate between the Windows RT version of Surface and the normal Surface when it was released. We were surprised to see that Acer is not launching Windows RT on the Intel Atom based Surface devices. Acer sent TechRadar images of a Surface with Windows 8 that did work on Windows RT and a Surface with Windows 8 that did not work on Windows RT. As Windows RT is built around what Microsoft calls the Modern UI (formerly Metro) interface, it would be easy for Acer to add a program like Photoshop as that would fit within the Modern UI guidelines. However, it's not clear how this will work. Will Acer have to change the BIOS to accept Windows RT as a primary operating system like they did to support Android or will they have to get a Windows 8 PC and install Windows RT inside of that? It seems like it could be a lot of work for Acer, so it

Q: Is normal to use a support server for a desktop app instead of AWS? I have a simple service, a desktop application, which does exactly what it says on the tin, from scratch. I have been using AWS because i've never heard of this, and learning there is a cost for each machine. So let's say we're talking on $20 a machine for the minimum 12 hours a day, 6 days a week. This would add up to about $400 each month (12 hrs * $20 per hr) so that's $480 a year. So what if i wanted to throw that onto a local server? Doesn't sound like a good idea (we're talking a $400 minimum investment upfront). I could run a VPN service with my router, but i'm assuming that's not as secure, and maybe that's exactly what i should be using. So I guess my question is, would it be better to go through AWS, or is there something better out there that people would use? A: It seems normal to me to use AWS, for all those reasons, although I never used AWS for hosting myself. In your case, the $20 per hour may be a major speed bottleneck, at least compared to $80. But I guess it depends on your target platform. If you target Windows desktop and Mac, I'd recommend using AWS. If you target Linux or UNIX, running a desktop on a local server might be faster than on AWS. A service like AWS might also be cheaper or cheaper than a dedicated machine. But I would only expect that. I cannot estimate your risks, but I suspect that a VPN service is not as secure as AWS. AWS is much more secure than VPN. You should not trust the VPN provider. Q: How do I publish a javadoc to the Maven repo I want to publish the javadoc to the Maven repo. I am running the mvn javadoc:javadoc -Dincludes> -Dpackage=../src/main/java/com/blah. But I don't get the documentation included. What am I doing wrong? A: This might be helpful:
