In this article, I'll show you how to work with the selections tool in Adobe Photoshop Elements to select and combine multiple areas of an image. You will learn how to select an area of an image, how to make selections based on the type of image, and how to use the selection tools to extract or erase areas of an image. Let's get started! Start working with your image I am going to start from the bottom and work my way up to the top. Open up your image and make sure that your image is large enough to work with. You can make all the changes you need in this one image. You can also use multiple images. Select the area of your image you want to work on With the image open in Photoshop Elements, you can add a new layer for easier manipulation. Click on File > New and you will see a list of different layers. Select the layer you want to use for your image. If you click on the photo icon, you will see different filters and options such as rotate, crop and exposure. Select the area you want Now, you can select the area you want to edit in the image. The selection tools may not always be appropriate for all purposes. Click anywhere to select the area you want to select. You can also click and hold a corner of the selected area. Photoshop Elements will turn the area blue. Use this tool to select smaller areas. Use the selection tool to select a larger area If you want to select an area larger than the select tool can cover, you can also zoom in. Zoom in until the desired area of the image is highlighted. You can also zoom out. If you are zooming out and want to select an area that is far away from what you're selecting right now, you can temporarily set the image to zoom so that you can select a larger area of the image. Use the Magic Wand tool to select You can use the Magic Wand tool to select the exact area you want and to select areas with similar colors. The Magic Wand tool selects the areas in the color wheel. The selection box you see when you click and drag over the image will change from gray to the color you see at the top of the color wheel in the wheelbox. If you don't want to select certain colors, you can deselect them.

North Carolina's state capitol building Since I'm in the midst of teaching a class in the Civil War at UNC, I made it a point of teaching my students about the dominant issue of that era. I also taught them about two other major underlying issues: rising class tensions and the continuing conflicts between "Northern" vs. "Southern" states. As I taught my students this, I had to admit that the key, if not the chief, issue was race. It was, and is, the root of the North/South conflict. Today I was wandering through the capitol when I happened upon these statues and – seeing the Confederate flag in the corner – decided to snap a photo for my students. It was here in the capitol building in the early 1990s when I first visited it after moving to North Carolina. It was not a happy experience: there were strong "Southern" folks everywhere I went, and they were imbued with a resentfulness and a sense of betrayal. So I had no desire to go there again. But I've been reflecting on this issue ever since. Why is North Carolina – of all states – so red? What is it about it that unites people so intensely? Is it the Klan? KKK marches? Lots of violent paramilitary groups? Even as late as 1966 they could get away with it? Nope. If you look in various other state capitol buildings and memorials, there are those historical markers that describe the Civil War and Reconstruction Period, often in crude and inflammatory terms. For example: North Carolina v. South Carolina: It began with the Civil War; it ended with Jim Crow. North Carolina v. South Carolina – slaves in the US Capitol (2011) North Carolina v. South Carolina – slaves in the US Capitol (2011) This was provoked by a loss in the 1970's of federal funding for the "monument restoration" project. But, at least in North Carolina, the overall tone is: The Civil War was a conflict between the North and the South – in which we, the South, were the underdog and, in the end, we won. That was the problem. More importantly, the Civil War was a war about slavery, and if slavery was ended the South was returned to the status quo ante bellum. Our problem was that African Americans were getting too
