The First Ever 3D Printed Thumb Will Change The Way You Play Video Games 0

You know that joke about how video game designers look at their thumb when they play their games? Every single one has those pesky little down arrows on the thumbstick, usually at 90 degrees. No matter how many times they cut that bit out, it keeps coming back. The truth is we're stuck with that ugly thumb for now, because it works for both Xbox and PlayStation. But there's a new piece of hardware out there that could change all that, at least in regards to thumbsticks.

It's a thumb that's built entirely of polyethylene. The world's first 3D printed thumb was designed by a university student who wants to change the world, and it could be the game changer we've been waiting for. A student at the university of Michigan's College of Engineering, Mark Hammond, has long wanted to make a thumbprint of a computer game. You see, if you touch a screen while playing a game, it's really hard to know which button to press at all times. It's not very intuitive. Hammond has long felt that he could help streamline this process for gamers by making a "print" of a thumb you could use to place your thumb on a game controller's thumbsticks. So, Hammond spent a bit of time pouring over how our thumbs work. Not how we play video games, but how we move around the world. To figure out how the thumbsticks work, Hammond used a digital camera to capture 10 different points on a person's thumb. He then converted those points into a digital image, and used that data to create a design of a thumb. The process is a bit tricky, because although your thumb's muscles are in the place that actually controls the thumbstick, there's also so much skin in the way, especially in the crease of the thumb. What Hammond did was a bit of reverse engineering. He took the actual thumb and manipulated it in software, down to the exact d0c515b9f4

The objective of this study was to assess the cellular immune response to human immunodeficiency virus type 1 (HIV-1) and hepatitis C virus (HCV) in patients with chronic HCV infection and HIV-1 coinfection in resource-limited settings, to assess their clinical status and treatment response. Peripheral blood mononuclear cells were isolated from 100 HIV-1-seropositive patients (33 with chronic HCV mono-infection and 67 with HIV-1 and HCV coinfection). Immunological analyses were performed using whole-blood assays to evaluate HIV-1- and HCV-specific cellular responses, including responses to five HIV-1 antigens (p24 gag, p17 gag, p24 gag, p24 gag/pol, and p24 gag/pol) and one HCV-specific antigen (HCV core). Specific cellular immune responses to HIV-1 antigens were detected in 55% of HIV-1 mono-infected patients. The presence of specific cellular immune responses to HIV-1 antigens was associated with a lower CD4+ T-cell count and higher HIV-1 viral load. The presence of HCV antigens was associated with a higher CD4+ T-cell count, lower HIV-1 viral load, and lower HCV viral load. The presence of humoral responses to HIV-1 antigens was associated with a higher CD4+ T-cell count and lower
