Anyone using XE 7 with PaintShop Pro X8 on a Windows 10 machine?A process is known in which a powdered material is conveyed using pressure.

A screw conveyor or vibrating conveyor, for example, is used for this purpose. As a result of vibration, the powder is conveyed. Along the process path, the powder is deposited in a hopper as a down-flowable mass in which the powder particle density is lower than in the powder. However, the deposition of the powder in a hopper is difficult, because the powder particles readily bridge over and the conveying pressure is not sufficient to overcome the binding effect of the surface tension. In addition, the denser the powder in a hopper is, the more slowly the flow occurs, which can be explained by the fact that the flow must first over-pressurize the powder mass in the hopper. However, this flow is accompanied by a conveying effect, which is detrimental to the quality of the powder/hopper surface. The flow rate of powder particles discharged from a powder/hopper can be greatly increased by removing the powder mass from the hopper and placing the mass on a conveyor belt. The drive of the conveyor belt is synchronized with the drive of the screw conveyor or vibrating conveyor used to convey the powder. However, it is problematic that the mass produced in this manner must be removed from the hopper and placed on a conveyor belt, at least part of which is stationary, in order to convey the powder particles further. In addition, the powder deposited on the hopper outlet may come out of it, so that the hopper outlet must be flushed, this being time-consuming. In another process, the powder is deposited directly in the downstream hopper by a screw conveyor or vibrating conveyor. This process is subject to 1cdb36666d
