To create a digital image, you'll need a digital camera, or you can take a photograph using your own camera or another digital camera and download it to your computer. If you have a scanner, you can scan images, and you can also convert your photograph to a digital file by using your scanner. Scanning and converting images is covered in detail in Book III, Chapter 4. Mastering Photoshop Elements Elements, as it is called, is a free version of Photoshop that comes in a trial edition and a paid version.

Like Photoshop, Elements has many tools for editing images. The trial version, which you purchase at a discounted price of $69.99 (you need to register your computer to get the free download), has many of the same features as the paid version. However, the paid version also includes many additional features. One of the most obvious differences between Elements and Photoshop is the number of layers you have. Elements may have only one layer, but you can layer and layer until your heart's content. Another difference is that elements lacks the tools for professional image manipulation such as gradients, cloning, and burn and dodge tools. Instead, Elements' tools are for basic editing; more advanced editing is accomplished using the exclusive effects and filters in Photoshop. You have a number of choices when it comes to either of these options. You can use the trial version, which is limited only to one editing process at a time; choose to upgrade to the paid version to have full access to all the features; or you can buy both versions of Photoshop Elements. (By the way, many people do, because it costs less to buy both versions in one purchase.) You can find out more about Elements and learn how to use the program in this book. In this section, however, you find out how to use Photoshop, a comprehensive program that enables you to work with a number of different image types, both raster and vector. Although you can edit any image in Photoshop, you can take advantage of a number of different features and projects using images. Take a moment to go through this section to find out how you can use Photoshop effectively to make your photos work for you. Figure 1-1 shows a photo of the author that was

Rep. Tulsi Gabbard of Hawaii is really the most popular Democrat for president in the country. Which makes her a big target for Democrat politicians like Sen. Kamala Harris of

California. On the campaign trail last week, Harris gave a startling allegation: Gabbard is being groomed by “the Russians” to be the Democratic nominee for president. “We also have people trafficking in hate and division the way that they traffic in guns and drugs,” Harris told reporters on a campaign stop in South Carolina. “We also have people trafficking in lies, and that’s the way they traffic in her.” Gabbard didn’t waste much time in responding with a scathing Facebook post: “I have to assume you know you’re being recorded, so why embarrass yourself by asking such a blatantly false question. You don't want the American people to know that you support efforts to curb the 1st Amendment and that you and your colleagues in Congress are more worried about the fact that you aren't going to be President than about doing what is right for the American people." Gabbard was, of course, referring to the Democrats' fervent efforts to block Donald Trump's travel ban. Gabbard would be an excellent choice to be the Democrat nominee for president. She's got a clean background and no Democrat scandals. But it's a stretch to say she’s “trafficking in lies” about her own country. Would-be presidents have often made similar allegations. For example, Barack Obama would often say that the American people are too stupid to know the truth about climate change. And George H.W. Bush frequently said the Democrats were being taken over by people who “hate America.” President Trump would throw one of his favorite phrases — “Fake News” — into his speeches to describe the mainstream media. And Barack Obama would utter the term “you lie” so often you’d think he had a “Liar!” t-shirt. More broadly, Gabbard is right: Democrats do “traffic in lies” about everything. To demonstrate, let’s look at the accusations Democrats are making against President Trump right now. Democrats claim Trump’s ‘Boomer
