Specialty door locks such as on doors for swimming pools, shower rooms, hot tubs, and the like are well known to the industry. These locks are spring loaded and are activated by a button or lever that is pushed by the user to lock or unlock the door. U.S. Pat. No. 4,505,007 discloses a sliding tubular handle for a door lock with a mechanism for maintaining the handle in the locked position when it is slid. Spring release handles are well known. Typically, such handles are used as part of a door lock for a refrigerator, see U.S. Pat. No. 4,705,481, or are used in a pivoting type of door lock. The typical spring release handle includes a spring that normally biases a pin into engagement with a bore in a lock barrel. The handle is resiliently mounted within the bore to permit the pin to move out of engagement with the bore. With the pin out of engagement with the bore, the door can be opened. The spring typically comprises an elongate spring blade having one end hinged to a base and the other end hinged to the pin. Movement of the pin relative to the base causes the pin to move the spring blade in a wiping action to move the pin out of the bore. U.S. Pat. No. 4,213,330 discloses a spring release handle for a lock. The spring release handle includes an elongate resilient deformable blade having one end hinged to a base and the other end hinged to the shackle or pin. The blade has a flat top surface and is movable between a locked position and an unlocked position. The hinge comprises a pair of slots that are formed in the flat top surface of the blade. The resilient movement of the blade is generated by a compression spring within the blade that acts between the flat top surface of the blade and the housing. When the pin is moved out of the bore in the housing, the blade moves from its locked position to its unlocked position. U.S. Pat. No. 4,196,834 discloses a spring release handle for a door lock. The spring release handle includes an elongate blade having a pair of openings formed therein. The openings are sized to accept a compression spring.
