More particularly, the present invention relates to a method and system for maintaining a network connection with an information provider in the event of a failure in the information provider or a communication component of the network. As the use of personal computers and networking technology has increased dramatically in recent years, so has the need for data backup and recovery systems. Network backup solutions have been developed to provide a user with the capability to restore computer data that has been lost or damaged, whether due to natural disasters, computer viruses, hard drive crashes, application problems or other causes. Many network backup products are available in the market, including many software packages that operate within the application layer of the TCP/IP protocol stack. Typically, data backup is performed by downloading data from a computer or network to a data storage device attached to another computer or network. Data is then transferred from the data storage device to a secure backup storage device, for example a tape or optical disk. One of the most popular types of software packages for performing data backup and recovery functions is the NETWORK DRIVES programs sold by Symantec,
