[17]: Gerald Gustave Deleuze (19251994) (2001).A novel formula-based approach for the evaluation of diagnostic performance of a new technology: the receiver operating characteristic curve concept. New technologies will always have a diagnostic performance that is different from the old tests. For making an informed decision about the acceptance of a new technology, one must know how good its performance is compared with that of the traditional tests. One should not just rely on the absolute differences in sensitivity or specificity. A common and a useful method is to calculate the area under the receiver operating characteristic curve (AUC). Here we show, that by using AUC and the formula given by DeLong et al. [N Engl J Med 1978;289:402-406] one can also derive p-values that test whether two new tests are similar in performance. If they are different, one can conclude that the new test is superior.

(In this example the file is in the same directory as the module, but that isn't always the case. All the examples online just show how to do it from within the file the module is in) var fs = require('fs'); fs.readFile('/proc/uptime', function(error, contents) { if (error) throw error; process.stdout.write(contents); }); A: How about: var fs = require('fs'); fs.readFile('/proc/uptime', function(error, contents) { if (error) throw error; process.stdout.write(contents); }); Edit: to answer your question - this is the wrong approach. You should only require files that are available from the node path. If your module module1 will be loaded in the current working d0c515b9f4
