Many families in Indonesia have experienced this themselves and have seen the impact that private school can have on their children's education. Costs of sending children to private schools have increased substantially over the past decade, leaving families to choose between education for their children and meeting their basic needs. To ensure private schools are accessible to all, the Indonesian government has introduced a conditional scholarship to low income families. This allows children to attend private school for free. However, the criteria for receiving these scholarships is often too rigorous and results in children of marginalised groups being left out.
