
Windows 10 V1511 AIO (X86-X64) 18in1 (May2016) Activated DVD Serial Key Keygen !FULL!

I have Windows 8.1 on my desktop and the same disk with MediaCreation tools does not show in the list of content. When I double click on the disk, it says you have insufficient rights to view this disk. I have no idea what this means. but I am running Windows 8.1 as administrator and I tried as such before doing the MediaCreation tool. Do I have to re-activate my PC and then select the option under system Properties on Windows 8.1 where the media activation is. The exact wording is "This computer is activated to the following license:" and I checked the option on 8.1 that says Upgrade. This has been checked. Still it gives me insufficient rights error message. Please help. After some research, I finally setup a new VM that has Win 10 Pro, 3 VirtualBox installed, a new a 80 GB SSD and a 1TB HDD. This setup would be perfect except for it is a hybrid. My old hardware is Win 7 Pro, a 120GB SSD, and an 1TB HDD. I think I could simply disable the new (Win 10 Pro) HD and still be able to have Win 7. I would use the 12GB for Windows 10 and the rest for Windows 7. As long as I disable the new (Win 10 Pro) HD and then use the 12GB for Windows 7, shouldn't the new installation overwrite the 3 virtual boxes in the old (Win 7) HD? I have also tried to transfer over the data from the old Win 7 HD to the new HD by hooking up the old HD to the new HD but only the data that is on the Windows 10 SSD was transferred over. I was hoping to see the data from the Win 7 HD on the new HD but it was not transferred over. Was there something that I missed out on when installing Windows 10 that needed to be done before changing the HD's? Thanks for all the help.

sorry for the delay in getting back to you, my reply must have got lost in the spam filters. i am also assuming you have the original oem license and not a retail license. if you have the original license, then the answer is yes you can use a new machine to activate your license. the activation will be tied to your microsoft account and any windows 10 license that was installed on that machine. you need a usb stick with the media creation tool that came with the windows 10 dvd, make sure the original windows 10 dvd is still present in the drive you are using. once you have the tool, run it and select usb and boot from the usb, if you have the original license you will be prompted to sign into your microsoft account. assuming you have the original windows 10 pro oem license on a computer which originally came with xp, you will need to install the oem version on a new pc to activate it. once you have the oem version, simply use the windows 10 media creation tool to create the usb stick with windows 10. you can use the windows 10 media creation tool to make a usb drive with windows 10, then boot from it to install. if you have the original oem windows 10 license, it will activate if you sign into your microsoft account. so, i have a product key and i have installed the windows 10 installation media from the official website. as soon as i reboot the system, i have the message "your new device is activated" please enter the account name and password that is registered to your new device. i have entered my windows user name and password, but the message appears with the message "account activation failed" i then pressed the ok button and i got the message "your new device is not activated. your product key is not valid for this version of windows" i then entered my windows user name and password, but the message appears with the message "account activation failed" i have tried several times, but to no avail. i have also tried to enter my windows user name and password again with different computers, but to no avail. what do i do now? 5ec8ef588b
